30 years after the demise of the Elden Gods, a divine power known as the Elden Ring made its way to the outlands and became the dominant power in the Lands Between. Most people living in these lands have no idea how the deity of the ring came to power or what it means to be a god. The powerful being known as the Goddess of Destruction has been an overseer of the lands since ancient times, but now that she has moved to the outlands, the land has begun to crumble. In an effort to mend the once great lands, the Goddess of Destruction entrusted an anonymous and unsuspecting youth with the task of subjugating the ten tribes of people who live in the Lands Between. Meanwhile, the ten tribes' chiefs fear that the arrival of a human-like god is a threat to their way of life. For ten tribes inhabit the lands and the goddess has not just entrusted a human child with her fate but also bestowed on him the power to destroy their gods. The storyteller the goddess has entrusted with this task is a boy with none of the natural gifts or ability the goddess's other chosen one, and far less human than the others. Ch. 1-3 Introducing the Avatar and his Journey to the Outlands The boy with no name and the future destiny of the ten tribes. Ch. 4-8 The Rebellion that Wasn't Expected In the outlands where the other world and the human world intertwine the ten tribes' rebellion against the rules of the goddess begins. Ch. 9-10 Whose life is It Anyway? In the lands between, a tale of life's choices and destiny unfolds. The fate of the gods and of the future of the land rides on the shoulders of this young boy. * The content of this product is subject to regional variation and change. ©2019 AQUAMELDEN GAME. The game allows players to enjoy the story of the mythical world of Elden not only through narration, but also through performing the game elements, and this is where the "RPG dimension" of the game, "RPG" being an abbreviation of "Role Playing Game", is captured. Horror author Stephen King told a cheering crowd at the Toronto International Film Festival that he was in "desperate need of a wife." To applause, King, 59, referred to his new movie "It" as his answer to "the biggest question any writer can be asked: 'what if you were to go blind, and everything went silent and still?'" "I didn't have a vision. I just had no vision," he said to laughs. "The big difference here is that I have all my senses." The film, which will be released in U.S. theaters Sept. 8, stars an ensemble cast including "House" star Andy Griffith, who plays a guilt-ridden man of a family trying to protect his children from a malevolent force. “I knew that when the time came, and it seems like it’s the perfect time, the time is now for me to try and get my wife, find my wife — I don’t want to marry a wife who is already married or who is in a mental institution. I want to find my own wife,” he said. At the panel with director Andy Muschietti, King asked Muschietti about a scene in which a house moves, which King said “I think is the saddest moment in my life.” “To me, there’s more music, more life in the house that people are afraid of, than there is in the house that they love,” King said. “It turns on a dime. We’re at a loss about how to have fun with movies now. It’s all dead bodies and blood, and fear, and explosions, and action sequences.” “It” is not the first movie where King has appeared as a cameo. There is a scene in “Stand by Me,” where he is shown with the film’s star River Phoenix in a bathroom stall as the latter pretends to get sick. There is also a scene
