A 64-kDa protein from nucleocapsids of the insect-specific double-stranded DNA virus, baculovirus, was purified to electrophoretic homogeneity. The protein (P64) was localized to the nucleocapsids by electron microscopy. The amino acid composition is substantially different from that of the P23 protein which comprises the main viral protein component of the nucleocapsids. The protein showed virus-induced DNA replication activity in a purified system in vitro. The implementation of a computerized clinical decision support system for pediatric head injury management in a developing country. It has been shown that the implementation of a computerized decision support system (CDSS) for pediatric head injury management in a developed country has led to significantly improved care. A similar intervention in a developing country may not be as successful. To test this in Panama, we implemented a CDSS for head injury management in a pediatric emergency department (ED) in a developing country. The study was a prospective, nonrandomized, pre- and post-intervention pilot study in a pediatric ED in Panama City, Panama. All ED admissions from December 1, 2010, to July 31, 2011, were assessed by manual chart review and then entered into a CDSS database. From December 1, 2011, to July 31, 2012, the CDSS was implemented in the same ED. The decision making strategies of a trained evaluator (an ED physician) using CDSS were compared with those of an ED physician who used traditional paper charts. We assessed the development of time spent, rate of change in medication, bed occupancy, and length of stay of the post-implementation group in relation to the following characteristics of the patients: location of injury, Injury Severity Score, and admission time. We also evaluated the ED staff satisfaction with the CDSS. A total of 201 patients were assessed in the pre- and post-implementation groups. The average age was 7 years (range, 0.25-20 years).
