[Vesico-ureteral reflux during pregnancy. Study of 19 cases]. Vesico-ureteral reflux (VUR) was observed in 19 out of 4444 (0.4%) pregnancies monitored prospectively over a five-year period. We performed 40 cases of ureteral reimplantation and 37 procedures for vesico-ureteral reflux. All operations were performed under general anaesthesia and were successful in every case. The average age of the pregnant patients was 28.7 years. Four cases had one or more urinary tract infections (UTI) as a child. VUR in pregnancy had persisted for at least two years in all cases. There were no maternal or fetal complications directly associated with VUR. VUR in pregnancy remained stable in 11 cases. In eight patients, urinary tract infection occurred during pregnancy, and one patient underwent a vesico-ureteral reflux operation postpartum. VUR during pregnancy should be treated by ureteral reimplantation, and in cases of bilateral reflux, a bilateral procedure is indicated.

In the middle of a viral election campaign, the health ministry on Wednesday proposed that election candidates should not be allowed to make announcements or engage in any political discourse -- including debates -- through Facebook or Twitter, two media houses reported. Proposals were made by Subhash Chandra Garg, Union Minister for Health, in a meeting with the Election Commission a few days back. The meeting was held at the health ministry's office in Delhi. If agreed to, the ban would apply to all political parties. There has been a banning of similar claims made via social networking sites like Facebook by political parties till the last Lok Sabha election. According to a news report in The Times of India, Chandra Garg reportedly also suggested that the electoral commission should be allowed to check if Facebook links in any media article were traced to the media house that hosted the article. He added that the text of the article should be checked and verified before it is published on the social networking site. In 2010, the BJP had blocked one of its candidates, Ram Lal, from speaking to party workers on its behalf in a Facebook post. Lal managed to override the ban.
